

From: Packer, David, Springer US David.Packer@springer.com
Subject: RE: Photograph size
Date: September 15, 2014 at 7:14 PM
To: Matthew Heun mkh2@calvin.edu

Matt,

I will get back to you on this. Regarding the abstracts, please see a few modifications to the Chapter 1 abstract attached. It is usually better to begin with a direct statement of the subject or proposition rather than a phrase such as "In this chapter,..." You may not like how I used "The guiding premise of this book...", but perhaps you can instead say that evidence is presented that suggests, supports the premise, etc.

If you agree with at least the first change, please start all of the abstracts with a direct proposition and some form of conclusion as presented in the chapter at the end of the abstract. Going back to "The guiding premise of this book," I was a little uncomfortable with a statement that seemed to take as an assumption something that at least some readers will have to be convinced is true. I think you have to say something in the abstract about where and how the book supports this premise.

Best regards,
David

-----Original Message-----

From: Matthew Heun [mailto:mkh2@calvin.edu]
Sent: Monday, September 15, 2014 4:54 PM
To: Packer, David, Springer US
Subject: Photograph size

David:

I made contact with the photographer for the Cuba cars photo in Chapter 2.

He asked what size we need to reproduce the photo in the book.

Can you provide guidance on this topic?

Cheers,

Matt

